

Radio.

A material variant likening a book with the transmission of a signal between aerials. The text 'Radio.' and '.Radio' on the respective ends, with the full point located centrally, implying connected sound relayed in either direction throughout the blank book. By way of further demonstration, the book block can be expanded in volume with air blown between the numerous glassine pages.*

